

THE TV PARENTAL GUIDELINES

KNOW THE FACTS: TV RATINGS AND PARENTAL CONTROLS

The television industry designed a TV ratings system – known as the TV Parental Guidelines – to give parents more information about the content and age-appropriateness of TV programs. The TV ratings can be used in conjunction with the V-Chip – a device built into most television sets – to allow parents to block out programs they don't want their children to see. Parental control technology in cable and satellite set-top boxes can also be used with the TV Parental Guidelines to block programs based on their rating.

KNOW THE RATINGS

Audience: indicates the audience for which a television program is appropriate.

Content Descriptor: Indicates a show may contain violence, sex, adult language or suggestive dialogue.

TV Parental Guidelines may have one or more letters added to the basic rating to let parents know when a show may contain violence, sex, adult language or suggestive dialogue.

- D – suggestive dialogue (usually means talk-about sex)
- FV – fantasy violence (children's programming only)
- L – coarse or crude language
- S – sexual situations
- V – violence

ABOUT THE GUIDELINES

- Guidelines are modeled after the familiar movie ratings. They are designed to be easily recognizable and simple to use.
 - Guidelines apply to most television programs, including those directed specifically to young children. However, sports and news shows as well as most home shopping and religious programming do not carry the Guidelines.
 - The ratings icon and associated content descriptors appear at the beginning of a program in the upper-left corner of the TV screen. If the program is more than one hour in length, the icon will reappear at the beginning of the second hour. Many channels also display the ratings icon after each commercial break.
 - TV ratings are applied on an episode-by-episode basis. This can result in individual shows within a series carrying different ratings.
 - Movies and television series may be edited differently based on when and what channel they air. Individual shows may be edited differently based on the time of day and channel they air – premium cable (e.g., HBO), basic cable (e.g., USA Network) or broadcast (e.g., ABC) – which can result in one show having different ratings to reflect the specific version being aired.
 - Thousands of hours of TV programming are rated every day. Program producers and distributors expend significant resources reviewing and rating programs before they air and have employees dedicated to ensuring that programs are appropriately rated.
